the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 5.5 million women employed in the public sector in 1999, compared with 4.5 million in 1980.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce. In 1999, 88% of the public sector workforce were women, compared with 78% in 1980. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that the public sector has a high proportion of jobs that are traditionally held by women, such as teaching, nursing, and social work.

Another reason why the public sector has become an important employer of women is that it has a high proportion of jobs that are suitable for women. For example, the public sector has a high proportion of jobs that are part-time, which is a common arrangement for women. The public sector also has a high proportion of jobs that are flexible, which is another common arrangement for women.

Finally, the public sector has become an important employer of women because it has a high proportion of jobs that are well paid. In 1999, the average salary for a woman in the public sector was £24,000, compared with £20,000 in 1980. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that the public sector has a high proportion of jobs that are in the higher grades of the public sector pay scale.

Overall, the public sector has become an important employer of women in the UK. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce, a high proportion of jobs that are suitable for women, and a high proportion of jobs that are well paid. As a result, the public sector has become an important source of employment for women in the UK.

4.2. Public sector

The public sector is a large and important part of the UK economy. It is responsible for providing a wide range of services, including education, health care, and social services. The public sector is also a major employer of women in the UK. In 1999, 5.5 million women were employed in the public sector, compared with 4.5 million in 1980.
